

What I do know is this competition is coming down to the wire! FOUR players within 550 points of first. Places 5 through 7 all within 1,000 points of the podium! And even 8 through 12 all within 1 week's worth of points from third place! Bananas.

Rankings by Week

This line chart displays the weekly rankings of 16 players over a period of 14 weeks. The y-axis represents the ranking from 1 to 16, where 1 is the highest position. The x-axis lists the weeks from Week 1 to Week 14. Each player's performance is tracked by a unique color and marker. The chart shows significant fluctuations in rankings, with some players maintaining stable positions while others show more volatility.

As per usual, I'll highlight some of the best picks of the week here starting with Sam's pick of Evan Dickens (Liberty) who ran for 267 yards and FOUR touchdowns for a total of -534 points. That is officially the best pick of the year so far, topping Week 12 Ahmad Hardy's -500 points. No wonder he jumped up 2 spots this week!

We had two Kaytron Allen picks this week; Mike M. and Brian (who is still holding down first place – but not for long!), taking advantage of his -152 points. Georgia Southern's Camden Brown went off for -114 points against Marshall for me as I try to close the gap on first place.

Ol' Trinidad Chambliss went for -79 points as Ian once again picked all players from a single game, stressing me out. Trusting the Egg Bowl to be normal was an especially bold strategy! Meanwhile, Spencer was living it up watching Nick Minicucci and the Delaware Blue Hens face off against UTEP to the tune of -51 points.

Hollie had two players on the nice list this week with ECU's Katin Houser and Kennesaw State's Baron Hopson (-18 and 0 points respectively). Right on!

Now for the not so good. We had our gaggle of non-pickers again this week; Chapa (who's really been out the entire year), Marc, and Chris. We also had two duplicate picks. Jackson picked Makai Lemon this past week and in Week 10 against Nebraska, while Ian picked Anthony Evans for the second time. Funny enough, also in Week 10.

We also had some injuries/potential injuries. Sam picked Micah Davey who has been injured for a while now, but Brian picked Donovan Faupel and I have no idea what happened there. No stats. No news. Weird.

Everyone else is just chugging along nicely. Remember, there are way fewer games this week than usual, and next week is only Army/Navy. Then all of the bowls/playoffs are rolled into a single week.

Good Luck!
