

Holy cow, guys?!

Did this weekend delivery or what?! Georgia Tech running a fire drill field goal to knock off Clemson (PS. I was in O'Rourke's Irish Pub in South Bend during this game and EVERY. SINGLE. PERSON. In that bar was cheering for the Yellow Jackets), Georgia and Tennessee going to overtime, and of course, your Fightin' Texas Aggies defeating the Notre Dame Fighting Irish on a 4th and Goal with 13 seconds left in the game!

You know who else delivered this weekend? Our new leader!

Rankings by Week

We have a new leader after the best week out of anyone this season so far! I also have to note that I had to adjust Jonathan's score. I manually entered 0 when it should've been 400 for picking Castellanos vs FCS team last week.

You know what Dario did to score -13 points for the week? He picked Mario Craver! Is the "Don't pick Aggies" rule still a thing? Maybe not – there sure a lot of Aggies near the top of best performances so far.

An average week kept me in second place. I picked a lot of 'small' school guys, and I guess it worked out fine. Nothing to complain about, but really wish I had the guts to pick Mario Craver against Notre Dame.

Moni had her worst week of the season, and honestly – not that bad. Maybe the wrong Aggie defender (Cashius Howell), but pretty good Rushing pick (Justice Haynes).

Brian moves up to 4th place after his best week of the season led by Jalen Kitna (son of the great Jon Kitna) and his -1 point. But 2 Georgia Southern players seems pretty suspect.

Logan has been making huge strides forward each week so far, and now he finds himself in 5th place. A Clemson receiver (Bryant Wesco Jr.) finally had a big game which led to the second best score of the week.

Mike G. also had Jalen Kitna versus Akron, so maybe just pick anyone playing Akron. That might be a new rule of thumb moving forward. I wish Makai Lemon did more against Purdue though.

Ian continues his insanity of picking four players from a single game each week, and this week, it was THE BACKYARD BRAWL (which went to overtime by the way). Man, those two fanbases HATE each other. I mean how many "Eat Shit, Pitt" shirts were caught on the broadcast?

Spencer, I'm gonna be honest. You were at the beach, I was pregaming the A&M/Notre Dame game. I'm not sure I got all your picks correct from your texts. Can you double check that for me?

Mike M. could've had a much better week if he paid attention to the dates of games. Picking Maverick McIvor against Nevada is a GREAT pick. Picking Maverick McIvor against Nevada on September 13 is a TERRIBLE pick. Those two teams play THIS weekend. Western Kentucky had a BYE.

Jackson, you kinda did the same thing as Mike. Sam Houston plays Texas THIS weekend. And actually, I'm gonna role Chris into this. I've never seen this before, but buddy, you picked FOUR players that were on a BYE. All four are in the matchups you put down this upcoming weekend. Maybe this is a good opportunity for your feedback. I've never seen so many different people make this mistake. Is the form confusing? Is there something I can do to make it better? Let me know in the comments.

Hollie picked Arch Manning despite her son explicitly telling us that “Arch is Booty Butt” last week. Stacking him with Parker Livingstone was a bold choice, but Colton Joseph against Virginia Tech almost made up for it.

Sam risked it and picked Austin Simmons against Arkansas this week. I didn’t get eyes on this, but is it true he only had 4 yards (plus a touchdown) in the game? I thought he was just out, and Trinidad Chambliss was just playing the whole game. What happened there?

Jonathan played it safe this week with Jeremiah Smith against Ohio (I think Ryan Day is trying to pad those stats for him), but I have a legitimate question. Is LSU’s offense bad? Garrett Nussmeier got 150 points but LSU only got 13 offensive points despite DJ Lagway throwing FIVE interceptions.

Marc decided to pick a running back that didn’t play this week (despite his team playing – not the same situation mentioned above). I didn’t watch a second of this game. What happened?

Chapa didn’t make any picks this week, which is kinda weird for him. I don’t think he’s EVER forgotten to make picks.
