

What's goin' on, everyone?!

I have finally reached the acceptance stage of grief.

A&M sucks. I've accepted it, and honestly? It's relaxing. Refreshing, even. I spent years believing hope was an important part of being a college football fan. Turns out hope is actually the source of all pain.

LSU beat A&M 35-6, and by the second half, I had achieved complete emotional peace. Can't blow a Playoff opportunity if there's no Playoff opportunity left to blow. Can't hurt me anymore. I'm free.

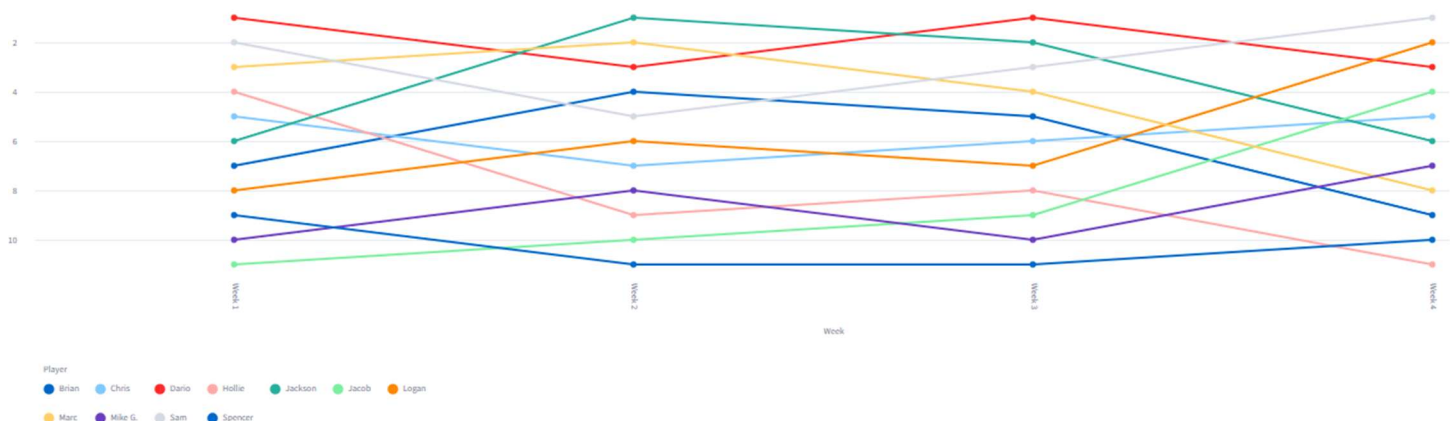

Elsewhere, Florida beat the ever-living shit out of Ole Miss, Georgia beat Oklahoma 41-13, Oregon pulled away from USC, Texas barely survived Tennessee, and Iowa beat Michigan on the final play. Pretty awesome weekend if you completely ignore the one team I care about.

Anyways, onto the actual important competition.

Holy movement, Batman!

Rank	Player	Score	Pts. From 1st
1	Sam	1,269	0
2	Logan	1,995	726
3	Dario	2,079	810
4	Jacob	2,250	981
5	Chris	2,346	1,077
6	Jackson	2,382	1,113
7	Mike G.	2,429	1,160
8	Marc	2,556	1,287
9	Brian	2,594	1,325
10	Spencer	2,949	1,680
11	Hollie	3,250	1,981

Rankings by Week

Sam. What the hell?!

Sam had the best week by 358 points, scored -285 overall, and jumped from third place into a MASSIVE lead.

All four of his picks scored negative points.

Jayden Maiava threw for 326 yards and accounted for three touchdowns against Oregon for -36 points. Michael Hawkins Jr. ran for 103 yards and THREE touchdowns for -106. Jesse Legree had 109 receiving yards and two touchdowns for -18. Then EJ Smith decided to make TWENTY-ONE tackles against Air Force, giving Sam another -125.

I know we've had four negative picks spread throughout an entire week before, but have we ever had one person go negative at all four positions? I'm not looking it up right now, but that has to be historic.

A flawless week. No notes.

Logan also went absolutely nuts, scoring 73 points and jumping from seventh to second place.

Trinidad Chambliss had 342 total yards and three touchdowns for -28 points despite Ole Miss getting murdered by Florida. Jadan Baugh was even better with 154 total yards and three touchdowns for -184. Malachi Toney added 120 receiving yards and a touchdown.

Samuel Omosigho's seven tackles were the only thing keeping Logan from going negative for the week, but I don't think he'll complain too much about moving up FIVE spots.

Dario falls from first to third after a weird week. Will Hammond was solid with 260 total yards and two touchdowns, Jesse Legree had his monster game, and Samuel Omosigho recorded seven tackles.

Unfortunately, Jamal Rule rushed for four yards against Michigan State. Sad trumpet noise

That's 392 points from one player. Dario was basically one competent rushing performance away from remaining in first place. Instead, Sam has left all of us in the dust.

Jackson drops from second to fourth after getting hit by the injury bug. Trinidad Chambliss and Malachi Toney were both excellent picks, and Nick Sessions recorded seven tackles against New Mexico.

But Nate Frazier was dealing with a rib injury and didn't play against Oklahoma. Full 400 points.

Georgia clearly didn't need him considering they beat Oklahoma 41-13, but Jackson sure as hell did.

Yours truly had the third-best week and jumped from ninth to fifth!

Caden Veltkamp threw for 314 yards and two touchdowns, Jadan Baugh had his -184-point game, and Robert Fitzgerald recorded 13 tackles against Indiana.

Then there's Easton Messer, who had only 15 receiving yards but somehow scored two non-receiving touchdowns. I don't know why I would ever want my RECEIVER to score touchdowns by doing something other than receiving, but I'll take it. I'm now only 981 points out of first, which sounds bad until you remember I was in dead last two weeks ago.

Chris stays in sixth place after a very respectable 503-point week. Michael Hawkins Jr. had 103 rushing yards and three touchdowns, Wayne Knight finished with 135 total yards and a touchdown, Malachi Toney had 120 yards and a touchdown, and Samuel Omosigho recorded seven tackles.

Really solid across the board. Chris just had the misfortune of playing during a week when Sam decided to break the game and half the standings teleported around him.

Mike G. jumps from tenth to seventh behind Jadan Baugh's monster performance. He also got 13 tackles from Jared Lloyd and a touchdown from Amare Thomas.

I do find it interesting that Mike and Sam both selected Michael Hawkins Jr., but at different positions. Sam used him as a rusher and received -106 points because of his 103 rushing yards and three touchdowns. Mike used him as a passer and received 118 points because Hawkins only threw for 132 yards and zero touchdowns.

Same player. Same game. A 224-point difference based entirely on the position selected.

The Stat Game!

Marc falls from fourth to eighth despite getting -137 points from Julian Sayin, who threw for 367 yards and four touchdowns while adding another on the ground.

Unfortunately, the other three picks combined for 924 points. Bo Jackson had 69 total yards, Johntay Cook II caught 35 yards, and noted TRAITOR Marc selected Whit Weeks against A&M only to receive four tackles and 300 points.

If you're going to betray us, at least be good at it.

Brian drops from fifth to ninth despite Caleb Hawkins running for 180 yards and a touchdown against West Virginia. That gave him -60 points.

The other three picks were less helpful. Ethan Grunkemeyer had 147 passing yards and one touchdown, Chris Durr Jr. caught 56 yards, and Kona Moore recorded three tackles. That's 836 points between those three, completely wiping out an awesome rushing pick.

Spencer finally escaped last place!

Did he earn it? Debatable.

Trinidad Chambliss and Jesse Legree combined for -46 points, which is excellent. Kyngstonn Viliamu-Asa only recorded three tackles, which is less excellent.

Then we get to Wayne Knight.

Wayne Knight had 100 rushing yards, 35 receiving yards, and a touchdown. Great pick! Only one small problem: Spencer already picked him.

DUPLICATE!

Instead of receiving 100 points, Spencer receives the full 400 like a doofus. He somehow turned a really good pick into the worst possible score entirely through administrative incompetence.

Honestly, that's more impressive than accidentally selecting someone who didn't play.

Lastly, Hollie falls from eighth to 11th with the worst score of the week.

She didn't have an injury. She didn't have a duplicate. She didn't select anyone playing an FCS opponent. All four picks just kinda sucked.

Jaron-Keawe Sagapolutele threw for 119 yards and zero touchdowns, Javion Kinnard had 13 total yards, Matthew Coleman caught 42 yards, and Curly Ordonez recorded eight tackles.

Her BEST score was 200 points.

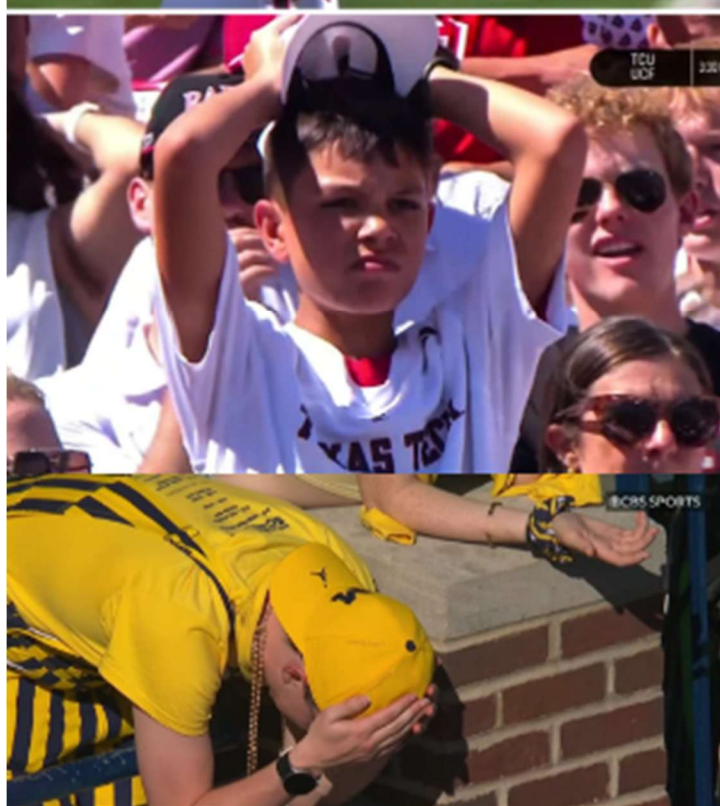

Marc accomplished something similar last week when all four of his picks scored at least 200, but Hollie took it to another level with 1,189 total points. She is now almost 2,000 points behind Sam after being ahead of him two weeks ago.

This game moves fast.

We have a 726-point gap between first and second, but only 601 points separating second from ninth. Spencer and Hollie aren't out of it either because, as we've already demonstrated repeatedly, injuries, duplicates, and four-yard rushing performances can destroy an entire week.

Don't forget to send me your Week 5 picks, check the injury report, and maybe search your own name in the spreadsheet before submitting someone you've already picked!

NEXT: 4 OLE MISS vs 21 FLORIDA - KICK at 3:50 ET

